

Remarriage His Billionaire Ex-Wife By H. D. Cynthia Chapter 139

Chapter 139

Terry gazed at Jessica for some time before he finally said, “She is not my girlfriend.”

Jessica felt a bit surprised to hear that at first. She then smiled and said, “Actually, Mr. Davison, you really don’t need to explain it to me.”

Terry also smiled. In silence, he stared straight at Jessica as if he wanted to see through her. Jessica felt a little uneasy under his scorching gaze. Jessica lowered her head slightly and said, “I’m still in the middle of something. I’ll head out now. See you, Mr. Davison.”

Terry did not speak. He stood where he was and watched Jessica leave, drowned in his own thoughts.

“What on earth do you want?

A man’s voice cut in from behind Terry. Terry sneered when he turned and saw the man behind him. “I thought Mr. Thomas was a gentleman. I didn’t expect you to eavesdrop on others.”

“You’ve been targeting me since high school. Whenever I want to develop a business, you’ll interfere. Business is business, but Jessica shouldn’t be your target for revenge.”

Lucas didn’t respond directly to Terry’s accusation.

“Mr. Thomas, don’t think too highly of yourself. I admit that we had some beef before, but I pursue Miss Hall only because I like her. It has nothing to do with you,” Terry stared at Lucas and said seriously.

“You don’t need to explain anything to me. You just need to know that if you have any ill intentions, I will not let you get away.” For years, Lucas and Terry never got along, so Lucas didn’t believe what Terry said.

“Mr. Thomas, if I remember correctly, you seem to be Miss Hall’s Ex-husband, Terry mocked.

Lucas felt a throb in his heart. He was never a good quarreler. Before Lucas could say anything, Terry continued, “If you really cared about Jessica that much, she wouldn’t have been so disappointed in the last three years and finally decided to divorce you. In contrast, I think I still have a great chance.”

“So what? At least I am willing to turn back.” Lucas’ expression changed slightly.

“Then I hope Miss Hall is willing to give you a chance.” Terry snorted coldly and turned to leave.

Lucas left the restaurant later, absent-minded. The lights in Los Angeles were bright under the night sky and the traffic was heavy. Lucas drove aimlessly on the street, and somehow, he went to the deserted outer city.

Lucas pulled over, leaned against his seat, and lit a cigar. He always saw himself as a determined and decisive person. Yet what Terry said today was still quite a heavy blow to him. For the first time, Lucas wasn’t sure about what the future would hold for him.

But Lucas soon adjusted himself. He snuffed out the cigar, started his car again, and drove back to his place.

Though the daling rumor of Terry and his new girlfriend” was no longer a trending topic on Twitter, it was still the Intest subject of gosoln in Wine-class society. Two days had posted. yeh Justin hadn’t heard any progtass frarn Lucas, which made Justin get heated.

Although Jessica was still far from the perfect granddaughter-in-law to Justin, he still found the daughter of the Hall family and his grandson could make a perfect couple.

Besides, it bothered Justin that Luna went to cause trouble for Jessica at the Hall Group the other day.

Justin didn’t know what Luna was plotting this time.

Lucas had just finished his work for the day at the company when Vincent knocked on the door and came in. He said, “The senior Mr. Thomas called. He asked you to go back for dinner tonight.”

“Got it.” Lucas looked a bit depressed.

Vincent nodded and then left the office after closing the door.

That night, Lucas returned home. Rebecca put on a smile when she saw

Lucas. "Lucas, you're back."

Ever since Olivia had been punished, she even felt scared to see her brother.

During dinner, the Thomas family were all very quiet. Only Rebecca would exchange a few words with Lucas.

Justin cast a glance at Lucas and then at Rebecca. "Rebecca, what do you think of Jessica?"

Rebecca was caught off guard by Justin's sudden question. She paused for a moment before she replied, "She is polite, sensible, and beautiful. I think she is very nice."

Justin nodded in satisfaction and looked at Lucas. "Have you considered what I told you last time? I think it's such a pity that you and Jessica parted with each other. When she was still married to you, we didn't treat her well. But still, I believe you two must have bonded more or less. If she's still on your mind, you should try your best to win her over."

"Grandpa, Jessica said after all the trouble we caused for her after the divorce, she only wanted to keep her distance from our family," said Lucas with a blank face.

Remarriage His Billionaire Ex-Wife By H. D. Cynthia Chapter 140

Chapter 140

Justin looked a bit embarrassed when he heard Lucas. Justin then tossed a sharp glance at Olivia.

"Olivia has been quite willful and always provoked Jessica. That was Olivia's fault. You don't need to worry about that. Marry Jessica again and leave Olivia to us."

Justin looked at Olivia and said, "Last time, I only locked you up in the Black House for three days. If you stir up any trouble again, you'll see how hard your life can be."

Olivia was very surprised and dissatisfied when Justin made her sound like a troublemaker. She wanted to refute, but when she heard Justin's warning, she lost the guts. She snorted and said, "I won't, grandpa."

"Alright, Lucas, come with me." Justin stood up and said to Lucas.

Lucas nodded to Rebecca and followed Justin to the study.

Dwayne helped Justin to the sofa in the study and left.

Lucas closed the door and walked to Justin.

"What do you think about remarrying Jessica?"

Lucas didn't know why Justin was so eager to have him remarry Jessica. Lucas said, slightly helplessly. 'I don't have any thoughts.'

"I know about that patch of land in the north. You yielded it to Jessica, didn't you?" Justin could not help but slap the table.

Jessica didn't ask for money when we divorced. This is what I owe her." Lucas' golden eyes flickered slightly.

However, Justin did not believe it at all. "You owe her billions of dollars? Is Jessica the daughter of the POTUS?"

Lucas couldn't argue with Justin. He wanted to say something, yet he didn't. What Lucas had done proved that he had feelings for Jessica. Yet Lucas was puzzled why his feelings for Jessica only surfaced after they had divorced. Lucas was sure Jessica's family background wasn't the reason.

Justin stared at Lucas in disappointment before he took out an invitation. Jessica will have her birthday next week. Morgan intends to hold a birthday party for Jessica in New York. This will be the first time for Morgan to publicly hold a birthday party for Jessica. It's unprecedentedly important. You should understand it. This is the invitation letter. You know what to do, don't you?"

Lucas took over the invitation. He lowered his head, with his golden eyelashes concealing the emotions in his eyes.

Lucas was about to leave when Justin said, "Lucas, your father's marriage was arranged by the family. He never had a happy life, and your mother is not happy, either. Although I want you to take Jessica as your wife, I won't force you if you really don't like her."

Jessica had no plans for her own birthday. She didn't take a fancy to a posh birthday party

But Morgan intended to take advantage of this birthday party to formally introduce Jessica to the upper class of New York. It could also prevent some idiots from bullying Jessica Morgan had been in the business world of New York mall for many years, and he got to know a lot of people. The birthday party of Morgan's only daughter was thus matchless.

Jessica returned to New York three days earlier. In addition to supervising the preparation of the entire banquet, she had to take part in the rehearsal as well. Many people wanted to get to know Morgan through the banquet, so those who wanted to ride on the coattails of the Hall Group all wanted an invitation.

Of course, the Hall family had criteria for their guests.

The Hall family was not born wealthy. They counted as new money. But May, Morgan's wife was from a prestigious family. Many of May's siblings had positions in Congress.

With the support of May's family, people would kill to get an invitation to Jessica's birthday party.

Originally, Jessica did not want to send an invitation to the Thomas family. It was her birthday party after all. She was afraid that seeing the Thomas family would affect her mood.

However, there were hidden rules in the upper-class society. If Jessica didn't invite the Thomas family, it would mean that the two families became enemies. Jessica gave it a second thought and told herself that perhaps Justin wouldn't show up because of their unpleasant history.

However, Wendy then came over to tell Jessica that Lucas would be attending the party on behalf of his family. Jessica felt quite surprised.

Jessica had not expected Lucas to come to her birthday party.

Some time ago, the two of them had some arguments in the car, and she thought Lucas had completely gotten over her.

However, Jessica quickly adjusted herself. Lucas was just a guest and that was all. She only needed to treat him the same way she treated other guests.

