

Apex Chapter 491

Chapter 491 Gratitude for Him

“Right, why did you run forward dumbly just now? And even put yourself in front of me. Are you not scared of getting beaten up?”

When Javier questioned Audrey, she answered in a huff, “You’re the dumb one. I did that to protect your guests. You’re staying in my hotel. Naturally, I have the responsibility and the duty to ensure your safety.”

Realization struck Javier. “I thought you wanted to protect me and got worried that I’d be hurt because you like what it feels like when you’re with me!”

Audrey blushed from the words. “What nonsense are you spouting? I’ll call the police on you if you say something like that again!” “You sure you’ll be able to do it?” Javier asked with a grin. Audrey ignored him and left with a turn of the head. She realized it now. She probably was not this rogue’s opponent when arguing with him, even if she were to combine two of herself.

Butch and the lackeys he had brought along had been caught. There was someone else who had been caught as well. He was unable to escape no matter what-the culprit behind what had happened tonight and the one who had called the men over, Jordan.

No matter what the relationship between Jordan and Audrey was, it was undeniable that Jordan was the one who had summoned Butch and his thugs. He had also asked Butch to beat Javier up, and that was going against the law. Even if Javier had kicked him previously, he did not leave or hide anywhere. He was already in the police station and obediently stayed behind bars facing the wall! Audrey was panicking a little by now. Since she could not find Jordan, she was worried that Butch’s lackeys, who were left out and about, would seek revenge against him. Fortunately, she received the police’s call two hours later-Jordan was detained.

She was both anxious and angry. Why was Jordan such an insensible good-for-nothing? It was going to be 10:00 p.m., and she had already washed up to go to bed, yet this was what happened.

Audrey quickly put her clothes back on and made herself look presentable before she went to Javier, She thought that her hope would be slim if she were to go to the police station alone to plead to let Jordan go. She thought that the chances would be higher if she asked Javier to go and bail Jordan out. After all, Javier had managed to summon so many police officers. She knocked on Javier’s door upon coming to his room. The latter agreed easily when he found out about everything, so much so that it embarrassed Audrey a little.

Audrey drove to the police station with Javier, The man behaved on the way, not doing anything else. Despite that, Audrey had to put up with his perverse questions and concern as the car sped along the way to the police station. The main culprits were interrogated through the night when Javier and Audrey arrived, including Jordan, who had just finished being questioned. The officer on duty tonight was coincidentally the chief who had previously given out the honorary citizenship, so he was welcoming when he saw Javier, After they exchanged pleasantries, Javier brought Jordan up. The chief thought about it. "So what Jordan did this time isn't serious. In laymen's terms, he only asked Butch over for a fight, and that fight didn't happen, so no tangible damage was done. Instead, Butch took a punch from you, and he has been crying foul about it..."

"But we've been investigating Butch's work prior to this and have already collected plenty of evidence. We've been looking for a chance to take him down once and for all since his men hadn't fully gotten together before."

"Your case today helped us catch his men just now. All the main suspects are here."

"The issue is that it's a strict period right now, and Butch is involved with the mafia while Jordan frequently initiates contact with him. To be strict and fair, he should at least be detained for half a month."

Audrey was on the verge of tears once she heard that Jordan would have to be detained for half a month.

Looking at Audrey's teary-eyed mien, the chief was a little curious. "This is?" "Audrey Mendez, Jordan Dowling's stepmother." Javier did not hide anything and briefed the chief regarding Audrey and Jordan's general relationship and current situation. The chief was moved when he found out about the kind stepmother's selfless sacrifice and care for her stepson.

"The law and mercy go hand in hand. All right. If Jordan can sincerely recognize the mistake he's made and not break the law again within half a year, I can specifically allow him to be released on bail."

"The bail of 500 dollars is refundable as long as he doesn't break the law within half a year, and this case stops there. However, if he breaks the law again within half a year, he'll be severely punished!"

The police chief followed the law and gave Jordan a chance to turn a new leaf within where the law permitted. After all, Jordan would have a record if he was kept behind bars, which would be inconvenient for many things in the future. Things like sending their children to school, joining a political party, or enlisting in the military were what people who had records with the police could not do.

Audrey knew well that it would have been futile if she alone had come to plead the case. The chief was doing Javier a favor. For that, she was grateful for the latter. When she recalled how the man was such a jerk to her, though, she felt warm all over for no reason...